Causes of Fibrocystic Breast Disease. What causes breast cysts to develop is not fully understood although a number of factors can contribute. Hormonal imbalances result in increase in milk-producing glands, an enlargement of cells and scarring of breast tissue. The hormones estrogen, progesterone and prolactin are all partly responsible for breast cysts especially an increase in estrogen or fall in progesterone levels.

Triple-negative responds well to chemotherapy, so most women have some form of surgery, chemo, and radiation. Metastatic, or stage 4 TNBC, is hard to fight, as are all stage 4 cancers, but it is the focus of most of the current research, so I am hopeful we find a treatment soon. I talk about things we can control ourselves — diet and exercise.
